THEME OF THE SEMINAR

“An equal world is an empowered world”

Our world and our societies are unequal societal structures that have been striving for an increasingly equal, equitable and thereby an empowered world. Numerous struggles to fight for women's rights since the past century have consistently put the focus on many manifestations of gender inequality practiced in the macro and micro institutions of an individual's lives. Voting rights, equality at the workplace and in family have simultaneously come under the scanner allowing for open conversations about the rights extended and those still withheld. As a result, gender equality, women's rights have taken center stage in the agenda of government, policy-makers, educationists, multinational corporations, NGOs and social workers. There have been multi-layered transformations in our understanding of gender equal world from theory to practice. Fundamental social institutions like marriage and family are undergoing profound and progressive transformations facilitating a smooth movement towards a gender equal and an empowered world. Gendered glass ceilings are beginning to be shattered, century-old stereotypes are being broken, gender biases are openly questioned and silences are starting to be doubted. In today's changing world, this national seminar on “An equal world is an empowered world” shall provide a platform to take the agenda of a gender equal world forward by tracing the landmarks, their contributions while also focusing on the roads yet to be traversed to make our world gender inclusive, accepting of differences and not categorizing identities in oppositional binaries.

CALL FOR PAPERS

In today's fast-moving global environment, students in particular have to connect their regional experience with the needs and demands of an international community. Therefore, the Seminar brings together scholarship on gender issues and women in the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences.
